TRAINING COURSES

GEPlan Consulting offers in-house training courses and field trips designed for petroleum and production geologists, geomodellers, reservoir engineers and geophysicists working on exploration, appraisal and development projects related to different types of reservoirs. The components of a subsurface team would greatly benefit from participating together.

We see many good reasons for running training courses:

1. offering an active learning experience that exposes people to share their personal experience
2. looking at things from a different perspectives and
3. generating new ideas and approaches for the everyday challenges in the E&P sector.

Training courses can be:

- “open” to participants coming from the industry. These courses are run in specific dates
- Training courses with participants from the same company. These courses are run on demand and can be tailored on the needs of the company/participants

We offer three types of training courses:

- Field trips (FT) – the training is run in the field using outcrops at different scale. During this course subsurface data are used to link outcrop observations with geological setting in the subsurface. The field trips duration varies between 3 and 7 days
- In-house Training courses (TC) – these courses are run either in our office (“open courses”) or in the client’s office and they focus on specific subjects. Their duration is between 3 and 4 full days
- In-house Workshops (WS) – these are shorter courses (2 days) and focus on specific regions/basin and offer an introduction to the main geological characteristics and HC potentials of the area
